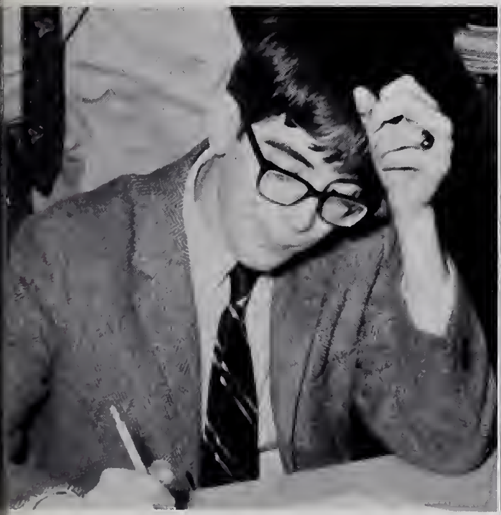
After the hot summer
we returned to squeeze
Not many had reached
but most of us IBM
with a perplexity

of Baltimore riots and beach parties,
an identity out of a spongy education.
the Know Thyself urgency of Berkeley students;
numbers were wondering just Who we were,
reflected in faces laughing, turning, changing, and growing.



One night we lit a fire.
As it flamed we chanted, "Pulverize Palmer," while elsewhere the cries were "Burn, baby, burn."
There was that pure excitement as we played hard and hoped harder.

Too often,
Education limited Experience to pages of black and white
no-color.
Once in a while, though,
a colorful explosion occurred
as we experienced
an important truth or two.
These were the times
when we felt wise.

Some of us
reached the Age of Reason
only to find things
more complicated than before.
Knowledge drew us tediously,
step by step toward wisdom;
while in a
maze of "learned ignorance," we fought frustration
with laughter.

Would you believe . . .

Mr. Haskell with a lollipop . . . Mr. Lynch in kneesocks . . .

Richie Ward and tea . . . the senior girls innocent?

Fall disappeared under winter's snow
and with it went the sun.
Through barren trees the wind blew sharply, stinging our nostrils
as we left footprints that would eventually melt away.

The heat went on
with winter.
Furnaces blazed
and life became more intense
as termpapers burned out

The days were shorter
and reading lists longer,
as we continued

to drive at 20 mph through the fog of an education.

SYMBOLS

Gears shifted with Christmas vacation.
Books were locked up and old friends returned as we lived on skis, in cars and at parties.
Around us laughter spun a cocoon of bliss;
while for some
the peace-on-earth preachings of the holidays floated past
in a cloud of napalm.

Death came with winter;
and yet, a new year was born.

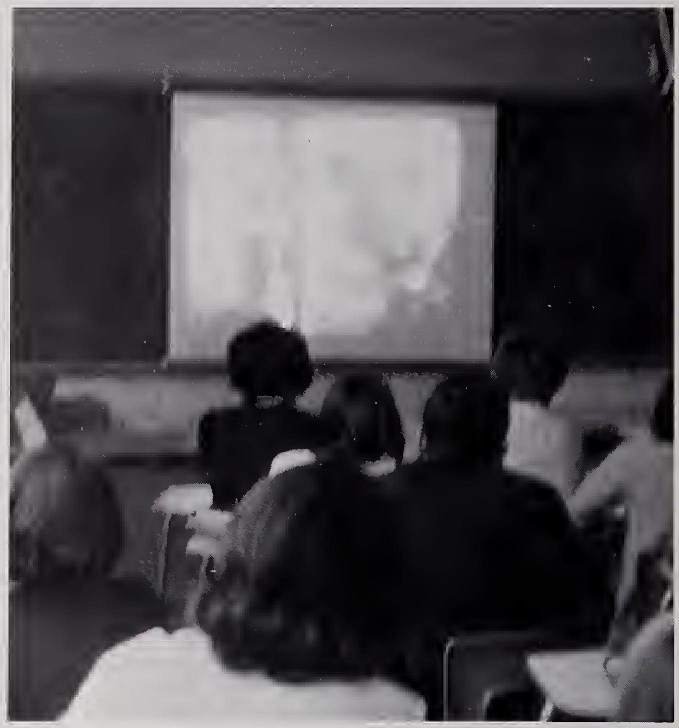
THE DEATH OF A PRESIDENT

BY WILLIAM MANCHESTER

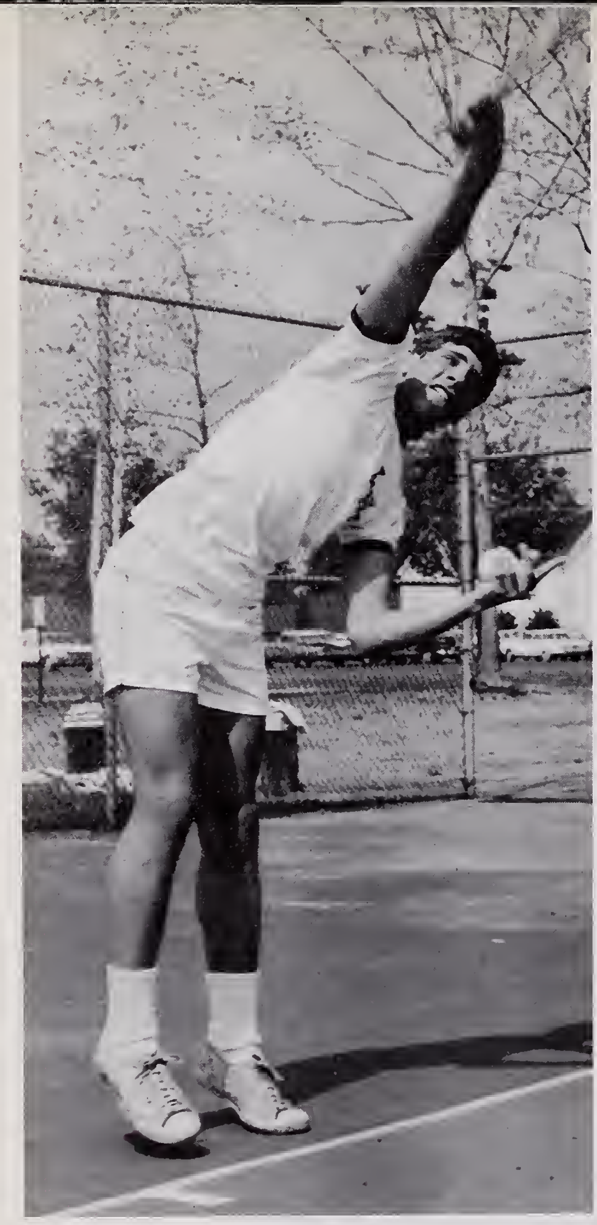
Beginning the most personal, detailed and unexpected account of the assassination. The only book Mrs. John F. Kennedy asked to be written about her husband.



The rhythm of our everyday existence continued refusing to slow down even for

through the season,

the Blizzard of '67.



Spring had come like the silver needle-note of a fife. The track was groomed, the nets were hoisted. Cracked bats lined the basepath. As the courtyard meadows turned green, the intrepid april puddles mirrored the past and the future. The present was ours to enjoy . . .

Psychedelic sounds emerged from the intoxicating depths of the Community House into the open canopy of spring. Cycles once more lined the parking lot. Senior pranks turned into the open doors of graduation. Lost books were left to their finders.

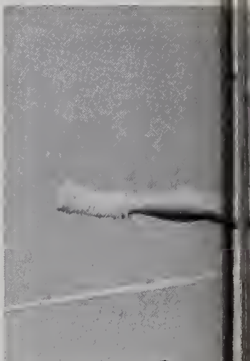
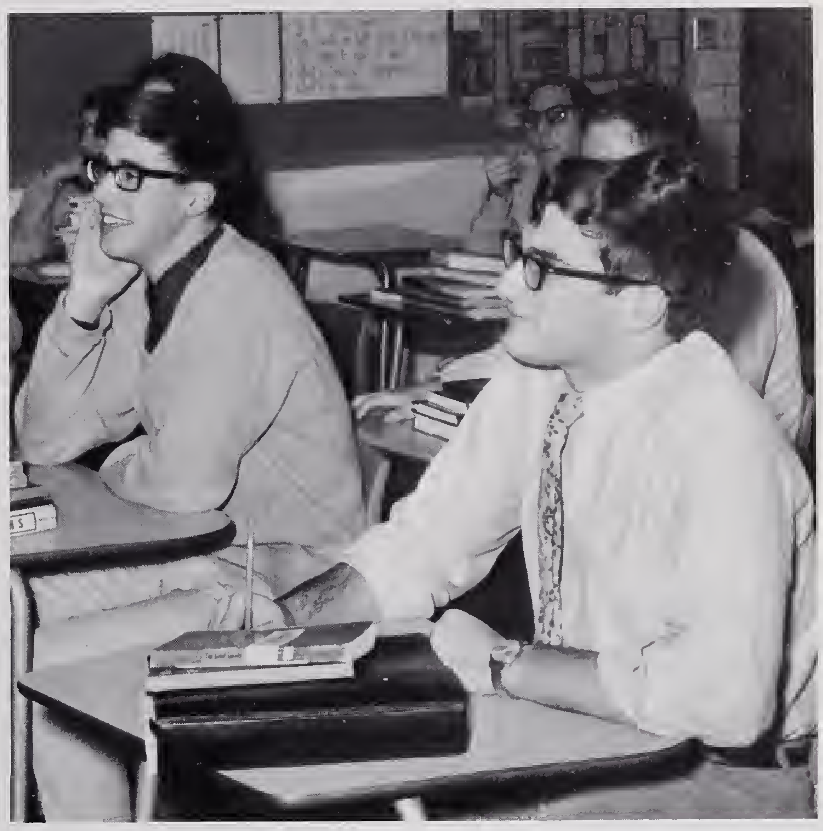
A lithe, corsaged hand slides gingerly through the reception line. Stiff tuxedoes press onward. A burning candle delights in the fragrance of shrimp arreganata. Academic life has known better times. Not only have the days grown longer, but so have the expense accounts, the hair, and the parties. And the beat goes on . . .



Only these
ten months
have passed;
the year has ended.



Now we can begin.

Official Yearbook Photographers

Well, that's it.
That's the year (as we've seen it).
Maybe we mangled things,
caught the trivial, skipped the essential.
But then again, if somewhere
among the lines of copy and candid shots,
the year came out looking the same shape
to you as it did to us, great!
At least—we tried.
